

David was born in inner city Los Angeles into a family that focused on technology. Early on in elementary school he decided his course was to be a neurosurgeon. Along with enjoying the family business of training youth to code David uses his knowlege to engage kids on a one on one level and build bridges that will empower them to go into areas that they never figured was possible. Most of his life he's been around great technology influencers while being a volunteer with his family at the Southern California Linux Expo (which he still does to this day). David brings the science and medicine perspective to the family as our soon to be surgeon.
